PEPYS AND EVELYN.

Difference In Methods of These Two Famous Districts.

Pepys carrative is always dramatic—himself being the center of the play—white Evelyn is historical, pathetic or didactic, as the mood seizes him. Pepys gives us the comedy of his time, as Plautis and Terence give us the com-edy of theirs. Evelyn, on the other hand, has something of Livy in his composition and not a little of Cicero. Compare, for instance, their treatment of the great fire, and you may measure the distance between them. Thus it is that Pepys account begins: "Some of our maids sitting up late last night to get things ready against our feast to-day. Jane called us up about 3 in the morning to tell us of a great fire they saw in the city. So I rose and slipped on my nightgown and went to her win-dow." And now turn to Evelyn and see the temper in which he views the destruction of the city. "The clouds of smoke were dismal and reached up-on computation near fifty miles in length." he writes the day after the fire. "Thus I left it this afternoon burning, a resemblance of Sodom or the last day. It forcibly called, to my mind that passage, 'Non enim hic ha-bemus stabilem civitatem,' the ruins resembling the picture of Troy. Lon-don was, but it is no more!"

Pepys sets the scene before you like a.man; Evelyn reflects upon the trage-dy like a writer, ingenious in reference and quick with allusion. We need not discuss which is the better method, but It may surely be said that the world will produce another hundred Evelyns avan trip over the desert along the before it fashions a fitting rival for great caravan route that runs from Pepys .- London Spectator.

It has been said that the French are the most polite people in the world, writes our lady correspondent in San Sebastian, but I do not think any one who really knows them will agree. However, they have some charming little ways, and when they are rude it is because they are deep down thoroughly selfish. My personal opinion is that the Spaniard is about the most delightfully polite person one can possi-bly encounter. If you ask your way in the street of some ordinary woman she will almost certainly go out of her way to accompany you down the street way to accompany you down the street and to carefully put you on the right road.
